The Bank of England has announced that it will lend high street and other commercial banks £50 billion to help Britain's economy recover from the 'credit crunch'. From what you know which of these statements comes closer to your view?

This is a sensible move; without it, banks would be unable to lend enough to individuals and companies, and Britain's economy would become weaker	33
This is NOT a sensible move. Too often, the banks have lent irresponsibly, and public funds should not be used to bail them out now	47
Don't know	20
